Coca-Cola's "Share a Coke" Digital and Social Media Campaign.

One of the most original examples of personalized marketing is Coca-Cola's "Share a Coke" campaign, which printed famous names on the bottles of the drink. The campaign also worked. Using hashtags like Share A Coke, Coca - Cola encouraged people to find and share their personalized bottles on social media. During the campaign, traditional advertising was combined with digital media, and customers were asked to do the same. The goal of this campaign was to reach out to young people all over the world by using emotional appeal, content created by users, and social media to get people involved. The purpose of this procedure was to reach the goal. In addition to ads on Facebook, Coca-Cola used targeted Google Ads to keep the campaign going. This was done to make sure that success would continue. The Integrated Marketing Communications (IMC) worked because sales in the US went up by seven percent in the first year of the campaign. There was also an increase in how much people interacted with the brand, which was more proof that the campaign worked.

Questions:

- a) How did Coca-Cola effectively integrate offline and digital marketing strategies in the "Share a Coke", Campaign?
- b) What role did social media and consumer participation play in reinforcing brand loyalty?
