Talent Retention at Horizon tech solutions

HorizonTech solutions, a mid - sized IT services company based in Bangalore, was facing a high turnover rate among its skilled employees, particularly in its software development teams. Over the course of two years, the company saw a 28% annual attrition rate, far above the industry average. Exit interviews revealed recurring concerns: lack of career development opportunities, inadequate recognition, work - life imbalance, and uncompetitive compensation packages. In response, HorizonTech's leadership launched a comprehensive talent retention strategy. First, they introduced a structured career path framework, including internal promotions, cross - functional project opportunities, and mentorship programs. They revamped their performance review system to be more frequent and feedback - driven. Additionally, they rolled out a "FlexiTime" policy, allowing employees to choose their working hours and work remotely two days a week. Compensation benchmarking was done to align their pay scales with industry standards, and they introduced quarterly performance bonuses. To foster a culture of recognition, a monthly peer - nomination program called "Star of the Month" was launched. Within a year of implementing these initiatives, employee satisfaction scores rose by 35%, and the attrition rate dropped to 14%. HorizonTech not only managed to retain its top talent but also saw a 20% increase in employee referrals for new positions - indicating stronger employee engagement and company loyalty.
